

How GRIRR
turned Ayesha
Khatoon's
deformed
feet
around

Garden Reach Institute for Research and Rehabilitation

A young girl with dark hair, wearing a patterned sleeveless dress, stands in the center of the frame. The entire image is overlaid with a teal color. Text is superimposed over the girl's body. The text reads: "Ayesha stumbled and fell each time she attempted to walk." Below this text is a decorative flourish. Further down, another line of text reads: "Her parents said 'Kuch theek nahi hain.'" The background shows a simple room with a doorway on the left and a patterned rug on the floor.

Ayesha
stumbled and fell each time
she attempted to walk.

Her parents
said 'Kuch theek
nahi hain.'

She underwent pediatric consultation
and tests.

The tests highlighted two words that Ayesha's parents
dreaded:
'Deformed foot.'

The parents
could barely
afford expensive
treatment.

They enrolled
Ayesha at GRIRR
in Metiaburz.

GRIRR studied
the foot and emerged with a remedy.

The NGO provided
a free tool for the deformed foot and conducted exercise
sessions.

The recovery
was gradual but irreversible.

Ayesha is now
able to run like other children.

Not bad for someone for whom was pronounced:
'Chal nahi
sakegi.'
